Once Upon a Time

There Were 2,000

Breads of U. S. Cars

One of the truly fascinating news-stand books is John Bentley's "The Oldtime Automobile," a Fawcett publication whose 75 cent purchase price will bring you the history and stories of America's pioneer automobiles.

Another there were 2,000 different makes. Bentley has rounded up photos of a surprising percentage of them.

The only pioneers which have come right down to today are: Buick, Cadillac, Oldsmobile, Ford, Studebaker, Willys, Packard, Hudson, and Nash. All these date back to around 1900. The Chevrolet didn't appear until 1911. The Maxwell car was brought out in 1904, but had been discontinued when Walter P. Chrysler took over its factory and started the Chrysler corporation in 1925.

It was the Chevrolet which enabled William C. Durant, founder of General Motors, to win back the presidency they had once kicked him out. Later they threw him out again because of his financial mismanagement but he had a genius for picking men.

Durant, like the Studebaker and the Chrysler, was a pioneer in the automobile industry. By 1907 he had an annual production of 4,000 cars and was known as General Motors.

Chrysler and Charles W. Nash, in 1908 Durant put Buick and Oldsmobile into a corporation called General Motors. By 1911 he had overpowered himself and financial trouble put him out on the street. He got behind a new popular-priced car, Chevrolet, and fought his way back into GM's control.

Back in 1901 there was a car named the Buick. It was a small car, built by Thomas B. Jeffrey and his son Charles. The Jeffrey was a great successful rival of the Buick, and was at the peak of its prosperity in 1910 when the company sold out to Charles Jeffrey, who had made a personal fortune as one of General Motors' top managers. Nash called the Buick, merely changing the car's name.

Walter P. Chrysler's appearance as a manufacturer under his own name was somewhat later than Nash's. The Hudson River kept expanding, and in 1916 leased part of the famous old Chalmers plant in Detroit. Chalmers' plant was for having introduced the first high-speed automobile engine, 3,400 r.p.m.s. But the entered Maxwell operation ran into increasing competition with Ford, Chevrolet, and Willys for the lower priced field. Maxwell's fortunes dwindled. Walter Chrysler left General Motors and started his own company, the Chrysler Corporation, and when he found he couldn't buy it, purchased the Maxwell-Chalmers facilities and brought out a brand new line of cars in his own name. Later he purchased the Dodge company, a 1915 beginner, and, finally, brought out the Plymouth as the low-priced successor of the original Maxwell.

Bentley's book is restricted to the years 1896-1915, and of course I had to furnish the Chrysler story from later automotive history. But all through Bentley's work there is the same theme of mechanical genius putting up first one product and then another. And many of those geniuses never got the recognition that the world has accorded Durant, Nash, and Chrysler.

Bentley reports in his introduction that: "Cool springs and a counterbalanced crankshaft aren't modern devices at all. They were introduced on the Buick in 1907."

Overhead valves and camshafts came out in 1906 on the Buick. Automatic transmissions dated back to 1896 on the Buick. And were revived in 1907 by the Columbia car.

Independent suspension and V-type engines appeared first in 1903 on the Morrone.

All these developments so extraordinary for their time, Bentley says, because these men had vision outstripped their public imagination and the technology of the time.

War so quickly as possible — by land attacks, naval blockades, and bombing of Chinese airports and shipping lines — yes, by atom-bombing if necessary."

This officer, however, was against employing Chiang Kai-shek's Formosa Garrison troops in Korea, because it would anger Red China to do so, but because he has no faith in the Nationalist soldiers.

"I'm afraid that two months after they were put in the line they would be back in the line, and go over to the other side, carrying their arms with them," he said.

How widespread such views are in the professional army I have no way of knowing, but there is a growing impatience to do something positive to wind up a conflict that has cost 12,000 American casualties in 30 months.

EAGLE STAMP

Working together for a Merrier Christmas... a job Eagle Stamps have done and done well for over 49 years! This year, with living costs and taxes still at a high level, Santa's going to be glad you are helping him.

... And what better way to help than with filled books of Eagle Stamps — each worth $2.50 in merchandise (food and gasoline excepted) — or the small booklet worth $1.25 in merchandise — each filled booklet representing money for Christmas spending obtained without sacrifice or effort on your part.

Maybe you saved Eagle Stamp booklets to provide an extra fund of money with which to meet Christmas gift expenses.

Maybe you used filled booklets to buy "little extras" during the year that the thrifty habit of saving Eagle Stamps enabled you to acquire without restraining your self or throwing the budget out of line.

No matter... there is still time before Christmas to fill more Eagle Stamp books and through them to bring happiness to someone on Christmas Day.

Yes... saving Eagle Stamps is helpful all year 'round... but especially at Christmas time when Santa needs your aid.

This officer, however, was against employing Chiang Kai-shek's Formosa Garrison troops in Korea, because it would anger Red China to do so, but because he has no faith in the Nationalist soldiers.

"I'm afraid that two months after they were put in the line they would be back in the line, and go over to the other side, carrying their arms with them," he said.

How widespread such views are in the professional army I have no way of knowing, but there is a growing impatience to do something positive to wind up a conflict that has cost 128,000 American casualties in 30 months.

EAGLE STAMP

Working together for a Merrier Christmas... a job Eagle Stamps have done and done well for over 49 years! This year, with living costs and taxes still at a high level, Santa's going to be glad you are helping him.

... And what better way to help than with filled books of Eagle Stamps — each worth $2.50 in merchandise (food and gasoline excepted) — or the small booklet worth $1.25 in merchandise — each filled booklet representing money for Christmas spending obtained without sacrifice or effort on your part.

Maybe you saved Eagle Stamp booklets to provide an extra fund of money with which to meet Christmas gift expenses.

Maybe you used filled booklets to buy "little extras" during the year that the thrifty habit of saving Eagle Stamps enabled you to acquire without restraining your self or throwing the budget out of line.

No matter... there is still time before Christmas to fill more Eagle Stamp books and through them to bring happiness to someone on Christmas Day.

Yes... saving Eagle Stamps is helpful all year 'round... but especially at Christmas time when Santa needs your aid.

Jersey City, Hoboken's neighbor, was scheduled for commission testimony last night.

Last night, Jersey City police said the headquarters there of U. A. Local 1247 had been broken into, the local, said complete union records for the past year were missing, and the local controls all Jersey City dockers.

The New York State commission is in its second round of public hearings on waterfront racketeering which milk the Port of New York's seven billion dollar shipping industry of an estimated 30 million annually.

Although the crime commission is a New York State body, it has been empowered to investigate the New Jersey docks, which are included in the Port of New York.

Witnesses yesterday said Mayor DeSapio and Commissioner Joseph P. L. Felt, said complete union records for the past year were missing, and the local controls all Jersey City dockers.

DeSapio said last night he will file a $200,000 libel suit against DeSapio. The commission did not say when the suit would be filed.

In announcing plans for the suit, DeSapio said DeSapio was an "irresponsible relative of mine who is entirely unable to hold a pen in his hand and is constantly making up lies."

DeSapio said he had no connection with any alleged waterfront racketeering, and as director of public safety, I intend to continue to stand up and all crime wherever found, on the waterfront or elsewhere.

Painter Killed By Student

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (UP)—A husky 16-year-old high school student confessed today that he fatally stabbed artist Ida C. Macke, 47, "because she called me a marijuana user," police reported.

Police said Donald S. Crosby admitted early today in a tape recorded confession that he killed Macke on a gravel, shell or shale road near the intersection of 12th and 13th streets, San Diego, on Dec. 12, 1932.

Of farms on gravel, shell or shale roads rose in the same period from 21,045 to 73,183. The number of Arkansas farmers left on dirt roads declined from 188,859 to 75,025.

Carrying the paradoxical figures further, in the last 10 years the numbers of her farms decreased from 218,874, 182,429 to 103,4 acres, and the value of the average farm from $3,238.00 to $6,002.00.

By Way Of Explanation
 Perhaps the most important single item contributing to this situation has been the growth of electric power. This applies to Arkansas as well as to many other parts of the nation.

The number of farms in Arkansas has increased from 1,027 in 1920 to 55,435 in 1930; tractors from 1,822 to 60,368; and automobiles from 16,548 to 65,977.

Better marketing and servicing roads were the third important contribution. In 1920 only 8,000 Arkansas farms were on hard surfaced roads, as compared with 24,192 on hard today. The number

Arkansas Farm Figures
While the number of people working on Arkansas farms decreased in the last 15 years from 495,361 to 283,455, the value of their agricultural products rose from a little less than 100 million in 1917 to a year to $384,519,000 in the same time.

Carrying the paradoxical figures further, in the last 10 years the numbers of her farms decreased from 216,874, 192,429, and the acreage under farm cultivation rose from 16,044,542 acres to 18,771,344. Arkansas farms have been steadily growing larger, and richer and better, while the number of people working them has just as steadily decreased.

In the past 30 years the total area of the Wonder State under farm cultivation has increased from 51.9 to 58 percent, the size of her average farm from 75 to 103.4 acres, and the value of the average farm from $3,238.00 to $6,002.00.

By Way Of Explanation
Perhaps the most important single item contributing to this situation has been the growth of electric power. This applies to Arkansas as well as to many other parts of the nation.

The number of farms in Arkansas has increased from 192,429 in 1922 to 121,832 in 1930. Farmers in the Wonder State in 1930 had 30,763 electric water pumps, 73,578 electric washing machines, and 2,864 electric milking machines. Milking machines alone are increasing in the state at a rate of 500 a year.

Motor trucks, tractors, automobiles and other mechanized equipment were the second most important contributing factors. Motor trucks jumped from 1,027 in 1920 to 55,435 in 1930; tractors from 1,622 to 60,368; and automobiles from 16,548 to 65,977.

Better marketing and servicing roads were the third important contribution. In 1925 only 8,000 Arkansas farms were on hard surfaced roads, as compared with 24,192 on hard today. The number of farms on gravel, shell or shale roads rose in the same period from 21,045 to 73,183. The number of Arkansas farmers left on dirt roads declined from 188,659 to 70,025.

The New York State commission is in its second round of public hearings on waterfront racketeering which milk the Port of New York's seven billion dollar shipping industry of an estimated $20 million annually.

Although the crime commission is a New York State body it has been empowered to investigate the New Jersey pier, which are included in the Port of New York.

Witnesses yesterday said Mayor DeSapio and Commissioner Borrell paid off political cronies with jobs on the Hoboken waterfront.

One witness, Anthony "Tony" Mario di Vincenzo, a longshoreman, said, "you can't get a job until you see Borrell and he sends you to Flonin."

Another witness, former Public Works Commissioner George J. DeVincenzo said he lost his New Jersey dock job in 1930 because he looked Flonin and Borrell on an alleged payroll faking racket. Flonin said he was police and fire commissioner, but was causing the public works back door in 1949 to make way for Borrell.

Commissioner counsel Theodore Kient said the way had taken testimony that Flonin was in DeSapio's office "often and dozens of times."

DeSapio, in his witness stand appearance, denied any wrongdoing and insisted Flonin had been in his office more than "half a dozen times." The mayor said he was not intimate with Flonin.
